LEFT: Agrowplow's engineering and production manager, Wade Smith, Wellington, with the Agrowdrill AD100, featuring a new pasture disc undercarriage, which was released at Mudgee Small Farm Field Days.

BELOW: The main pressure spring on the disc arm offers 150 kilogram breakout power at the tip, while the discs feature uneven notching – 15 on one and 11 on the other – which ensures the two discs always slice against each other.

Castrating bloodlessly can help reduce stock fatalities, says Technipharm franchise holder, Charles Stewart. Mr Stewart, Northland, New Zealand, attended Mudgee Small Farm Field Days for the first time this year, promoting a range of bloodless castrators. Mr Stewart said Technipharm also tried to encourage producers to castrate when animals were at least six months old to promote better growth. The rings used with the system are designed for calves and designed to be tighter.
